It's been a really fun climate week for us. We had some very engaging conversations about regulations, and in particular, how the large number of regulation states to be parsed through and how to help people manage understanding, what's mandatory, what isn't mandatory, what applies to them, what doesn't apply to them? Why should we bother?

Speaker 1

What's the impact? Are we being driven by regulation? Are we self-motivated to get our acts together from a climate perspective?

00;00;35;00 – 00;00;42;08

Speaker 1

And there's no one who's not touched by it, whether it's voluntary or whether we're getting ourselves ready for what will be mandatory.

Speaker 1

We're all, you know, in this journey, we know which direction of travel the regulators are heading in.

The conversations were so enriching that often people would go on and on after time when were breaking out into discussions, the discussion was so rich, but we were really having to pull people out of those discussions because of that sharing and the different perspectives. Having, all types of clients and investors around the table was really engaging as well.

Really enriching to get those different perspectives.
